

moodagent for Spotify

– a success story. But don't just take our word for it

WIRED

“Speaking of moods, perhaps the most esoteric of the apps in the launch lineup is Moodagent. It attempts to rate tracks on four factors -- sensuality, tenderness, happiness and angeriness.

The best feature, though, is the ability to set curves. If you want a playlist that starts out sensual but gets progressively angrier, you can do that. Or one that's tender and starts out happy, dips in the middle, but ends up happy again at the end.”

THE HUFFINGTON POST

“New Spotify Apps: The Best New Features You Need To Download

Moodagent is a playlist creator. The team at Moodagent has crawled through each and every song in Spotify's 15 million track library and rated the tracks based on how Sensual, Tender, Happy and Angry each is. You can create a mood-based playlist several ways with Moodagent -- first, by pressing one of the four mood icons at the top and letting random songs populate the list; second, by entering the name of a track or artist and allowing Moodagent to discover 20 to 25 songs with a similar mood; third, by dragging any of your favorite songs into Moodagent and having it create a list; and fourth, by dragging in a playlist you've made outside of Moodagent and letting the app sort the playlist from happiest to least happy, most sensual to least sensual, etc.”

Los Angeles Times

“Our users want an easier way to build playlists. Moodagent does that better than we can ourselves. At the same time, we bring value to our partners by providing them with the music to go with their services.”
Ken Parks, head of Spotify's U.S. operations”

Spotify Apps

“And we're delighted to say that some of the brightest and best brands in the world are doing just that. Brands like TuneWiki for lyrics, or Moodagent to match the perfect music to your mood.”

“Spotify invited a limited amount of partners to their beta, but there's already some fabulous stuff in there. My favorite, from Moodagent, puts together playlists based on mood”
